While serving with APD, Sam began a career as a traffic reporter with KXAN-TV, then as a traffic reporter for 590-AM KLBK Radio. Because of Sam's law enforcement background and knowledge, the morning show on KLBK Radio included him as a talk show host and he became known to listeners as "Sergeant Sam."

Sam excelled as a sergeant over a shift of men at APD and excelled as a radio talk show host. He was dedicated to his work. After 31 years of public service, Sam retired as a Senior Sergeant from the Austin Police Department in 1995.

Following his retirement from APD, Sam worked at the Texas Department of Transportation, creating and organizing the Traffic Patrol for our Texas highways. He was instrumental in the creation and implementation of the current 911 Center in Austin.

In his long work history, Sam always had a second job in addition to his full-time job, among which were: Taxidermist, Head of Security at the Stephen F. Austin Hotel, Head of Security during construction of Barton Creek Mall, and auditor and security advisor for Jack-In-The-Box restaurants in a multi-city area in Central Texas. For two years, Sam worked 80 hours a week while Judy was studying and became a certified court reporter. Sam admired and respected the people who worked for him and for whom he worked. He truly loved his work careers and said many times over the years that God had blessed him in all his endeavors.
